Shivjeet Potdar is an architect, production designer, and contemporary artist whose practice explores the relationship between perception, space, and awareness.

He is a graduate in Architecture from R.V. College of Architecture, Bengaluru and a graduate in Production Design from the Film and Television Institute of India (FTII), Pune. His background across architecture and cinema has shaped his understanding of space, storytelling, form, and visual experience.

A self-taught artist, Shivjeet's paintings emerge through observation, meditation, and experimentation. His works explore themes of attention, perception, thought, and the way humans create meaning from experience. Through abstract forms, layered surfaces, and process-driven methods, his practice investigates the meeting point between art, architecture, and consciousness.

His artistic journey is expressed through Conscious Omnium an exploration of interconnected experiences, awareness, and the creative process. His works invite the viewer to look beyond the visible form and observe the subtle relationship between the observer and what is observed.

THE LIGHT ATTRACTS EVERYTHING

A 3 AM meditation led into this painting process. For the first time, decided to document the experience and speak in front of the camera. As the terrace lights drew bees from the darkness, the act of creating also brought distraction, fear, movement, and awareness to the surface. This work became less about achieving stillness and more about observing everything that gathers around light.

SYMMETRY IN THE SWARM

Series: States of Attention 2/5
Medium: Acrylic on Ivory paper
Size: 56cm x 71cm
Price: ₹60,000 INR

This emerged from observing distraction, fear, and the gradual ability to remain present. As bees gathered around the terrace lights, the chaos of movement became the subject of observation. With deeper focus, the external world began to fade, and patterns started appearing through afterimages — symmetrical forms emerging within the swarm. The painting explores the hidden order within apparent chaos, and how attention can transform disturbance into perception.

CONCENTRIC EMERGENCE

The camera was still present, but it no longer occupied the space the same way. The bees remained around the light, yet the mind had begun to move past distraction. What stayed visible were the afterimages — concentric formations expanding and dissolving around a growing centre of light. The experience felt similar to searching for light while trapped inside fabric — like the brief moment when a T-shirt catches around the head and the eyes instinctively move toward the opening. This painting emerged from that sensation of perception pushing itself toward clarity.

PYRE FOR PERSPECTIVE

Series: States of Attention 4/5
Medium: Burnt on Ivory paper

During meditation, a disturbance arose from the thought that thoughts themselves continue to arise endlessly. The act of painting began to feel performative — an image repeating itself through habit, observation, and identity. A question remained: if art is meant to liberate, what must first be burned? Began burning paper and using the burn marks themselves to form an eye-like structure on the canvas. The process became less about creating an image and more about confronting perspective through destruction. This work emerged from an attempt to burn perspective itself.

THE CANVAS WOULDNOT EMPTY

Series: States of Attention 5/5

The meditation began, but thoughts arrived faster than silence — thoughts about painting, the camera, people watching, and the future. Instead of resisting them, placed them onto the canvas. I tried covering everything in black, searching for emptiness. But the mind was still active, still moving. Colours returned, one layer washing over another, like thoughts replacing thoughts. This work explores a question: If thoughtlessness is not the goal, can deep awareness itself become meditation? Perhaps painting is also a meditation — not by escaping thought, but by moving completely through it.

BREATH AND THE MIND

Series: Black canvas 1/5
Medium: Oil pastels on black paper
Size: 54cm x 67cm
Price: ₹65,000 INR

The journey begins with a black canvas a space before form, representing stillness and possibility. Through Anapana meditation, attention moves towards the breath: the touch of air at the nostrils, the movement through the body, and subtle sensations around the forehead. Thoughts continue to arise and pull attention away, but awareness returns again and again to the breath. This painting explores the relationship between breath and mind the constant movement between distraction and observation, thought and presence. A visual reflection on the process of becoming aware.

SUBTLE CURRENTS

Series: Black canvas 2/5
Medium: Oil pastels on black paper
Size: 54cm x 67cm
Price: ₹55,000 INR

Attention moves deeper into a smaller field of observation — the space between the nostrils and the upper lip, where the breath gently touches the body. The slightest sensations become visible: the movement of air, the changing waves of feeling, and the subtle currents that are usually unnoticed. Thoughts continue to arise and pull attention away, but awareness returns again and again. This painting explores the refinement of attention — discovering the depth within a single breath and the invisible movements that exist within each moment.

THE TREE HOUSE

Series: Black canvas 2/5
Medium: Oil pastels on black paper
Size: 54cm x 67cm
Price: ₹75,000 INR

The meditation began with observing the breath, but attention moved towards a thought — the design of a tree house for a friend's farm. A place to work, observe the land, and remain connected with nature while working remotely. Instead of resisting the thought, I followed it. The structure, the space, the relationship between architecture and landscape began to take form on the canvas. This work explores the meeting point of meditation and creativity — where a thought becomes a design, and design becomes a form of observation.

VORTEX OF AWARENESS

Series: Black canvas 4/5
Medium: Oil pastels on black paper
Size: 54cm x 67cm
Price: ₹75,000 INR

Through meditation, attention moves through the body — observing sensations from head to toe and back again. As awareness deepens, these subtle sensations begin to feel like waves, converging into an inner movement — a vortex within the body. For brief moments, the outside world fades, leaving only observation and experience. This painting explores the relationship between sensation, awareness, and the continuous journey of understanding the self through observation.

THE SHAPE OF BELIEF

Series: Black canvas 5/5

Medium: Acrylic and chalk powder on black paper

Size: 54cm x 67cm

Price: ₹75,000 INR

This work begins with a question: do we experience truth as it is, or do we experience the meaning we create around it? The painting starts with transparent gum applied on the black surface — an invisible structure waiting to be revealed. Powder colour is then introduced, exposing patterns that were already formed before they became visible. The process becomes a reflection of perception itself. We observe, interpret, connect fragments, and create meaning. Gradually, belief gives shape to what we see. This painting explores the space between reality and interpretation — between what exists and what the mind reveals.
